

REAL LIFE STORY

OREM'S HOLLYWOOD INSIDER SHARES TALES OF WALT DISNEY AND CLARK GABLE

BY NATALIE HOLLINGSHEAD

With a smooth leather vest, oversized belt buckle and well-worn cowboy boots, Grenade Curran looks like he just stepped off the set of an old Western movie.

His throaty laugh and eager smile, though genuine, feel suspiciously scripted, and his deep voice booms across the living room like an actor on a movie set.

Mountainland Applied Technology College

Looking for a new career or needing to upgrade your skills?

We can help you get where you want to go !

We provide training in the following areas:

Automotive Technology
Business Technology
Certified Nursing Assistant
Chef Prep
CDL
Cosmetology
Dental Assisting
Medical Assisting
Physical Therapy Aide and much more

www.mountainlandatc.org

The decor in Grenade Curran's Orem home has a Hollywood theme from floor to ceiling, including photos of friends Clark Gable, Walt Disney and Ava Gardner.

Perhaps the saying is true — old habits die hard. Grenade can't help but look the part. The 70-year-old man started out in diapers at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Hollywood and later worked for several studios, including Walt Disney Studios and Columbia Pictures.

He's seen both sides of the camera after working as a production assistant or actor in more than 20 feature films and 70 commercials.

Now retired and living in Orem, Grenade still has that silver screen sparkle. He gets a gleam in his eye when he talks about the good old days spent wrestling with Clark Gable, dancing with Ava Gardner and joking with Walt Disney.

Diapers, Camera, Action

Getting your first break in the movie business can be rough, but Grenade had an easy in.

"I started acting before I was born," Grenade says. "My mother already planned it."

Grenade's mother, Marion Ahern, was a dancer for MGM. Originally from Provo, she left Utah to pursue her Hollywood dreams in the '30s. She started out at Paramount but was transferred to MGM, where she met Grenade's father, Charles, who was also on studio loan-out from Twentieth Century Fox.

With a father who was a stand-in double for Clark Gable and a mother who danced in musicals, Grenade spent a lot of his childhood on movie sets.

"When I was a tiny baby I started out right in front of the camera," Grenade says.

Actors like Robert Taylor, of "Billy the Kid" fame, would often tote him around. One of Grenade's most embarrassing moments came as an infant when he soaked Robert's shirt with a wet diaper.

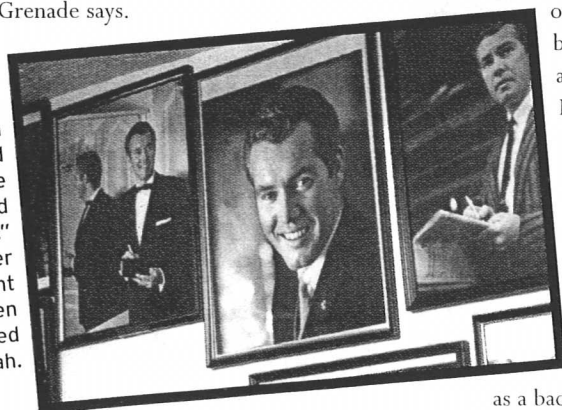

"Mother was mortified," he says.

When still a young boy, Grenade took a trip with his dad to Clark Gable's house. When Clark approached Grenade to give him a customary hair tousle, Grenade tried to gain the upper hand by messing up the star's hair first. Before Grenade could escape, Clark had him pinned on the living room floor and the two wrestled while Grenade's dad laughed.

"No one in motion picture history ever messed up Clark Gable's hair but me,"

Grenade says.

Grenade Curran looked and acted the part of "old Hollywood." He later raised eight children and moved to Utah.

Dancing with the Stars

With both parents entrenched in show business, Grenade started with one foot in the studio door. His mother took advantage of her position and taught Grenade everything she knew — including how to dance.

MEMORABILIA

Walking through the basement of Grenade Curran's Orem home is like taking a private stroll down Hollywood Boulevard.

Autographed pictures and snapshots of movie greats line the walls, and Grenade has a story for each one.

His large memorabilia collection includes:

- a cowboy hat worn by Roy Rogers
- a vest worn by Kirk Douglas
- a pair of cowboy boots worn by John Wayne
- a scarf from Clark Gable

"She planned certain things," he says. "The opportunity would not have been there had my parents not been in the industry."

Marion's dance lessons paid off when Grenade got his first big break. At 19, Grenade attended a cattle call at the Nico Charisse Dance Studio and impressed the director with his dancing skills.

"He asked, 'Where'd you learn to dance like that?'" Grenade recalls. "I said, 'My mom.'"

Through his dancing skills, Grenade won spots

as a backup dancer on "Singing in the Rain," "Band Wagon" and "Silk Stockings."

The 6-foot-1 Grenade was also used as the dance rehearsal partner for Ava Gardner in "The Barefoot Contessa."

Every Once In A While, Something Comes Around That Changes Everything

Trellis on the Green

LUXURY CONDOMINIUM RESIDENCES OVERLOOKING RIVERSIDE COUNTRY CLUB

2280 N. FREEDOM BLVD
PROVO, UT
WWW.TRELLISINFO.COM

Jim Hathorne
Aspen Real Estate & Development LC
(801) 735-6763

Although dancing was his bread-and-butter for a time, Grenade was also cast in minor acting roles in the productions.

"Through being there, I did a lot of small bit parts," he says.

Uncle Dalt Wisney

With a few years of entertainment experience under his belt, Grenade got a job working for Walt Disney Studios where he was introduced to the company's namesake. Walt was intrigued with Grenade's unusual name (it's French) and quickly gave him a nickname.

"He called me 'Shrapnel' and I called him 'Uncle Dalt Wisney,'" Grenade says. "He got a charge out of me giving him back the same treatment he gave me."

Whenever Grenade ran into Walt they'd exchange nicknames and Walt would ask for his opinions on Disneyland, which was under construction. One of Grenade's suggestions that Walt used was to have blue and green colored tiles decorate the base of Tomorrow Land's 24-hour clock.

"It's nice to have the big gun on your side," Grenade says, "but you earn that trust."

At the same time Grenade was working in production on live-action films "Davy Crocket" and "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," his cousin John Ahern worked in film animation. John's father moved to Hollywood with his sister (Grenade's mother) and also worked in the movie business.

John and Grenade worked together on Disney projects such as "Lady and the Tramp." John created an animation sequence, and Grenade did sound effects as a chicken and a dog. (For more on John's career, see page 50).

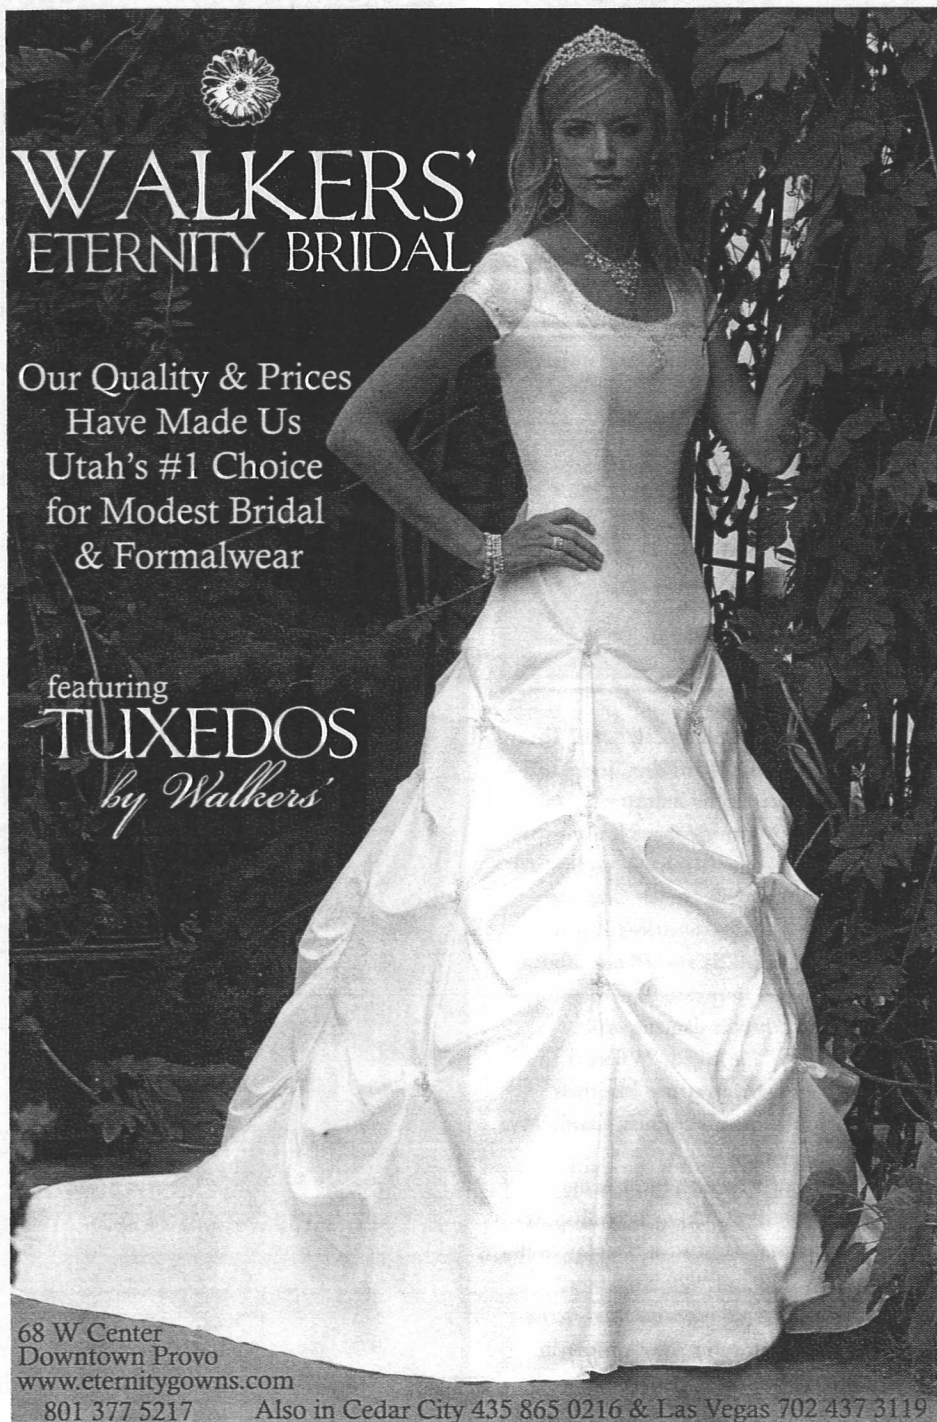

His Own Script

Living in Hollywood exposed Grenade to a rougher side of life, but he says he didn't stray from his morals.

"It's the roughest industry in the world," he says. "Fame and money can break the strongest."

Often, actors would pass around cigarettes or drinks on breaks, and Grenade would decline. After several attempts to get him to smoke failed, Grenade says the actors stopped pressuring him.

"Lee Marvin, who drank and smoked, would

WALKERS' ETERNITY BRIDAL

Our Quality & Prices
Have Made Us
Utah's #1 Choice for Modest Bridal & Formalwear

featuring
TUXEDOS
by Walkers'

68 W Center
Downtown Provo
www.etsnitygowns.com
801 377 5217 Also in Cedar City 435 865 0216 & Las Vegas 702 437 3119

THAT'S A WRAP

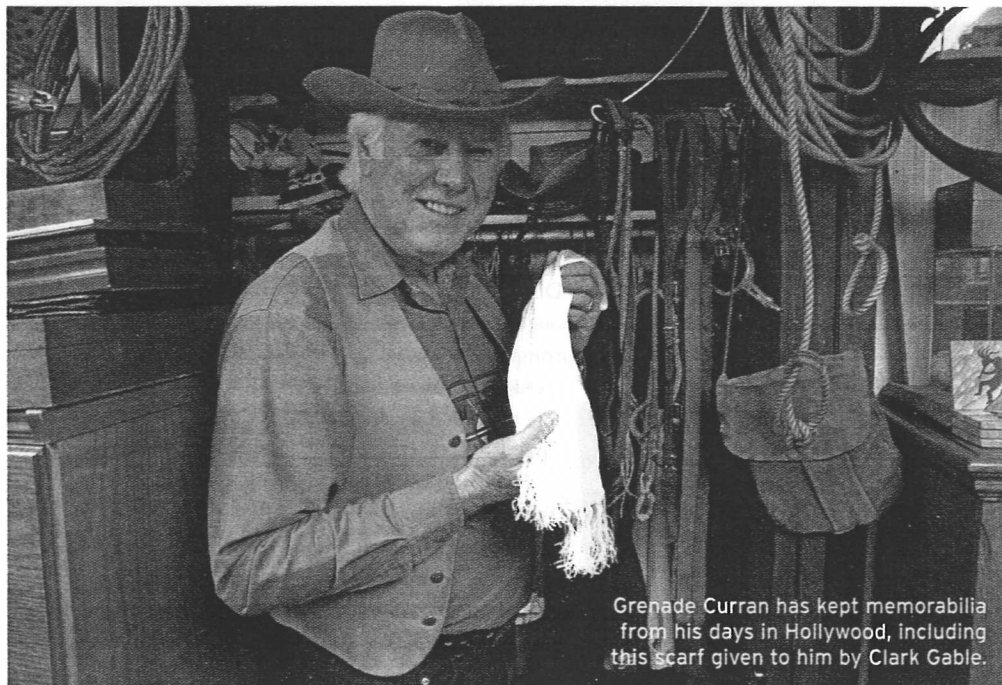

Grenade Curran participated either in front of or behind the camera in dozens of films and TV series.

FEATURE FILMS

Singing in the Rain (1952)
The Band Wagon (1953)
Seven Brides for Seven Brothers (1954)
20,000 Leagues Under the Sea (1954)
Davy Crocket: King of the Wild Frontier (1954)
Guys and Dolls (1955)
Silk Stockings (1957)
Sergeants 3 (1962)
The Professionals (1966)
Camelot (1967)
Planet of the Apes (1968)
The Great Bank Robbery (1969)
Hello Dolly (1969)
The Good Guys and The Bad Guys (1969)
There was a Crooked Man (1970)
Cold Turkey (1971)

TELEVISION SERIES

Cheyenne (1955)
The Beverly Hillbillies (1962)
Star Trek (1966)
The High Chaparel (1967)
Garrison's Gorillas (1967-1968)
The Beautiful Phyllis Diller Show (1968)
Queen for a Day (1969)

Grenade Curran has kept memorabilia from his days in Hollywood, including this scarf given to him by Clark Gable.

not allow someone else to offer me a cigarette," Grenade says. "He didn't want me to lose the standard of goodness that I stood for. I stood of my own conviction, my own choice."

He turned down $500,000 (equivalent to more than $3 million in today's dollars) in the late '50s to be the Marlboro Man, one of many jobs he says he was offered but refused because he didn't want to compromise his standards.

"I never did walk around trying to be better than somebody else," he says. "I walked around quietly doing my business and some people noticed."

Grenade took time off from Hollywood to serve two LDS missions — one from 1955 to 1957 in San Fernando Valley and a second from 1958 to 1960 in the Central States mission.

Final Cut

Instead of returning to Hollywood after his missions, Grenade moved to Salt Lake City and started working in a men's clothing shop. He planned to attend BYU that fall, but soon he had a part as a Native American in "Sergeants 3" with Frank Sinatra.

Although Grenade was nearly trampled to death while filming the movie in Kanab, he took a liking to Westerns and worked primarily with the genre for the rest of his career.

After "Sergeants 3" wrapped, Grenade returned to Provo and enrolled at BYU. In 1965, he graduated with a double major in motion picture/television and public relations/advertising.

Soon after graduation, Grenade was back in Hollywood, where he worked behind the camera on films like "Major Dundee," "The Professionals" and "Planet of the Apes." He also produced a small independent film, "Ransom Money," in 1969.

"I did acting, behind-the-scenes, wardrobes, props, stunts — everything," Grenade says.

From his work on Westerns, Grenade befriended actors Roy Rogers, Lee Marvin and Clint Walker.

In the early '80s, he took leave of Hollywood again and returned to Utah. Here he met his wife, Marta, raised eight children and formed an independent film company.

Grenade continued acting for advertisements and television commercials with clients like Marriott Hotels and Snowbird Resort.

Now semi-retired, Grenade's Hollywood days are the inspiration for a book he is writing on his life experiences, called "My Life in the Movie Business."

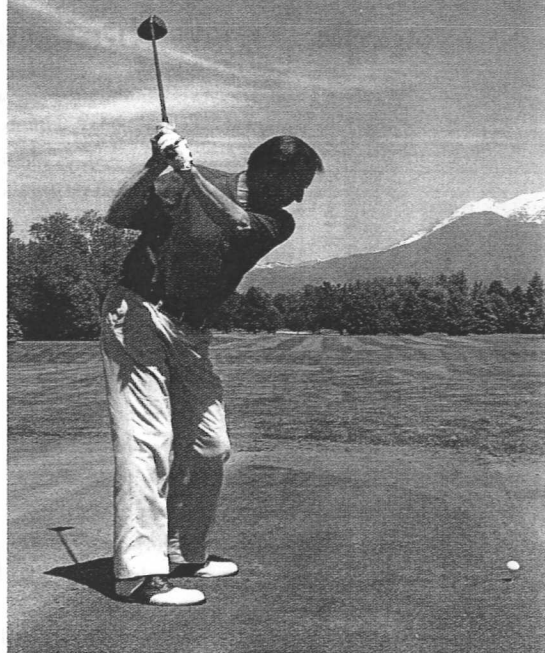

He is also looking for funding for a movie he wants to produce on the Utah War, tentatively titled "Shed No Blood," and he recently returned from a weekend with Clint Walker at the Western Legends Roundup in Kanab.

"I still keep my hands in it," he says.

Although he claims he's retiring, it may be an act.

Old habits die hard. ♦

Welcome to Provo.
We've rolled out
the green carpet.

Panoramic views of majestic Mount Timpanogos and Riverside Country Club, walking distance to Brigham Young University and best of all, located in the heart of Provo. Trellis on the Green offers two- and three-bedroom luxury condominium residences with unsurpassed views, 10-foot ceilings, elevators to all floors and secure underground parking.

www.Trellisinfo.com

Trellis on the Green

2280 N. Freedom Blvd • Provo, Utah

Jim Hathorne
Aspen Real Estate & Development LC
(801) 735-6763

Animated Life

Spanish Fork's John Ahern has 5 Emmys and 1 Golden Award

J ohn Ahern remembers the day a teacher confiscated one of his comic book creations.

Like many of his fifth-grade peers in Southern California, John loved to draw cartoons and would often bring his sketches to school.

One day, a teacher seized one of his comics and snarled, "You'll never be an artist."

That was nearly 60 years ago and John has yet to forget the stinging comment. But after "Muppet Babies" won five Emmys with John as producer, he's certainly proved the teacher wrong.

John, who retired to Spanish Fork in 2000, worked for 50 years as a motion picture screen cartoonist. During his career, he garnered awards from the Carnegie Art Institute and Academy of Arts and Sciences. John's most recent accolade came in April when he received a Golden Award from the Animation Guild for his outstanding career.

Like his cousin Grenade Curran (see page 44), John grew up around the entertainment business. Their parents worked together at MGM studios, and Grenade and John attended the same high school.

Both worked at Walt Disney Productions in 1955, where John got his start in animation. Although John's college degree was in engineering, his love of art prompted him to apply at Disney after he returned home from an Army stint overseas. He took an animation test and was hired on the spot.

His first assignment was for "Lady and the Tramp," and assignments on other animated classics like "Sleeping Beauty" and "The Aristocats" followed. In seven months, he was made an animation assistant in the special effects department, a promotion that had taken others seven years.

John's creative mind was also put to work on Disneyland, as company executives often asked the staff artists for ideas on the unfinished amusement park.

"I came up with the idea for the Matterhorn and thought we could have a ski jump with it and invite clubs to ski jumping meets," John

Dr. Greg G. Pitts, D.D.S.

Family and Sports
Dentistry

Confidence From
Beautiful, Straight,
Natural-Looking
White Teeth

Cosmetic Dentistry
Tooth Whitening
Recontouring • Bleaching
Porcelain Crowns and Veneers
Orthodontics • TMJ

visit us at 9 North 1100 East
American Fork, UT
www.gregpittsdds.com

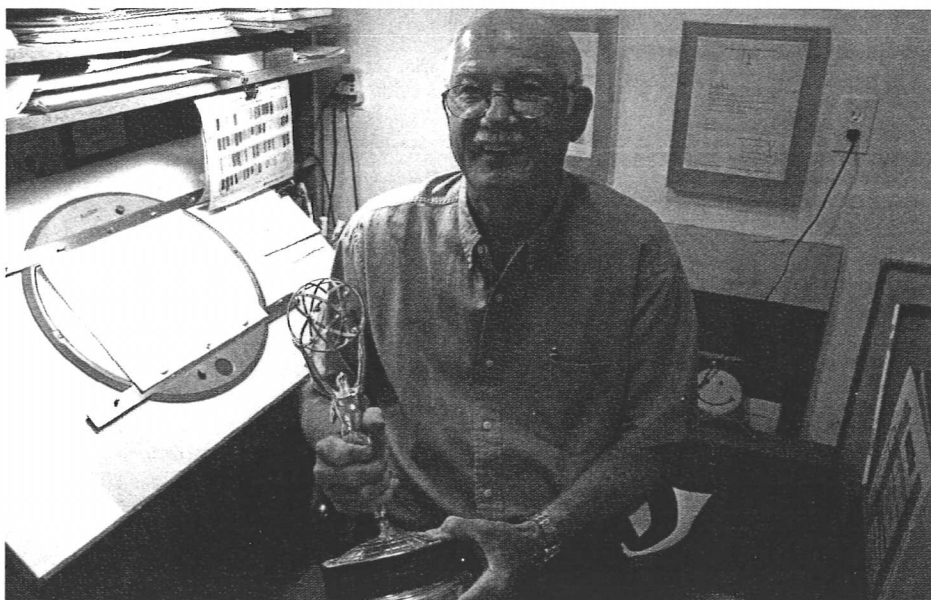

ZOOM!

CEREC

Visit or Call Today 763.9000

John Ahren won an Emmy as producer of "Muppet Babies." Now he illustrates books and teaches animation at BYU.

says. "The lawyers nearly died so instead they fixed mountain climbers on the outside."

Toon Town

In the '60s, John left Disney and started working at Hanna-Barbera Productions. While there, John worked on one of animation's most recognizable characters: Templeton in "Charlotte's Web."

"We created Templeton where he was really more a personality," John says, "and he stole the show."

But being an animator doesn't always mean creating characters, and John says much of his career was spent recreating scenes, doing layout or working on storyboards.

"Your feature was really the prime thing and the other stuff was just grinding out," he says. "You had to be able to draw anything and make it look identical to something another guy had drawn."

While at Hanna-Barbera, John worked as a layout artist on "The Flintstones," "The New Tom and Jerry Show" and "Scooby Doo." He also freelanced for Disney's "True Life and Adventure" series doing photography work.

During his 50-year career, John worked for a handful of Hollywood's best animation studios and helped create some of television's most memorable cartoons. At Marvel Productions, John did storyboards for favorites like "Spiderman" and "GI Joe." It was at Marvel that John won an Emmy as producer of "Muppet Babies."

His work as an artist has also taken him overseas to England, Korea, Taiwan and Japan, where he represented a dozen studios and supervised animation production.

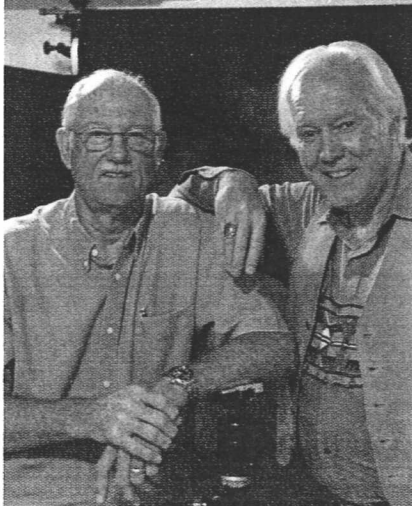

New Drawings

In 1999, John retired from the Motion Picture Screen Cartoonist Union and left California for Utah. He and his wife, Shirley, chose to live in Spanish Fork so they could be closer to the mountains and their four grown children.

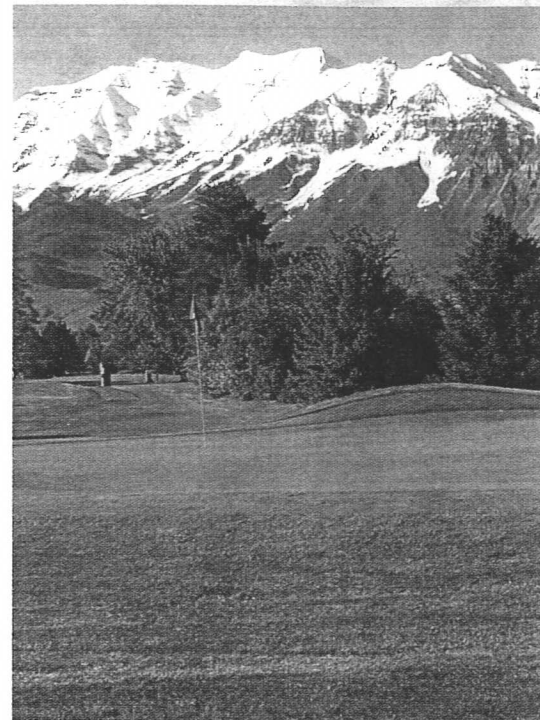

He still keeps his hands in the animation industry by illustrating books and developing part of a new program for the Discovery Channel. John also runs his own photography business and teaches animation full-time at BYU.

If only his fifth-grade teacher could see him now. ♦

Cousins John Ahren and Grenade Curran worked together in Hollywood.

Trellis on the Green LUXURY CONDOMINIUM RESIDENCES OVERLOOKING RIVERSIDE COUNTRY CLUB

For those who've awaited the perfect time and place to own a luxury condominium residence in the heart of Provo, the wait is over. The Trellis on the Green overlooks hundreds of acres of meticulously maintained golf course with unsurpassed mountain views. A very limited number of two- and three-bedroom richly luxurious condominium residences are available for purchase.

2280 N. FREEDOM BLVD
PROVO, UT
WWW.TRELLISINFO.COM

Jim Hathorne
Aspen Real Estate & Development LC
(801) 735-6763

Hollywood comes to BYU

By ANGELA LEWIS-
ECKSTEIN

Sporting old leather boots given to him by John Wayne, faded jeans and a tan suede jacket over a teal western shirt, film producer Grenade Curran told students to use their names and pursue their goals with intent.

"You have a name and there is tremendous use in that alone," Curran said. "Your name can be of great use to your friends, family and career, if you want to make something out of it because your name leads to a title."

He described how his unique name gave him a foothold in the movie business when he met Walt Disney in the early 1950s.

When Disney asked where he got the name "Grenade," Curran gave him the same explanation his mother offered while he was growing up: "He was born with a blast."

And the inertia hasn't stopped.

In the 1950s Curran worked for MGM Studios as an actor-dancer on "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers," "Singing in

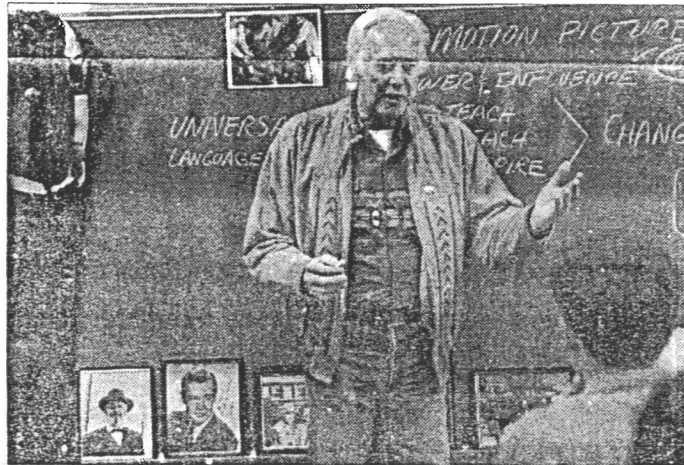

Photo by Amber Clawson

Film producer Grenade Curran encouraged students to create opportunities for themselves.

the Rain" and "Silk Stockings."

His career continued in 1955 at Walt Disney Studios when he worked as an actor-diver-production assistant on "Davy Crocket," "Mousekateers" and "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

He worked behind the scenes for movies like "Camelot," "Hello Dolly" and "Planet of the Apes."

Curran attributed his success to being able to create his own opportunities.

Opportunities, he said, are like closed doors.

"It takes effort to turn the knob and step through," he said. "If you don't do it, somebody else will...If you don't make your own opportunities, you'll have a life of 'I could've, should've and didn't.'"

Curran said students should create their own door and their own opportunities if neither exist.

"Make the goal and then make the motions to reach the goal with intent," Curran said.

801-607-1386

SEARCH:

GC

Home | World | Metro | Campus | Arts & Culture | Sports | Opinion | Religion | Features

Services

- Mission Reunions
- Advertising
- Our Sponsors
- Classifieds
- Handheld Version
- Text Only
- E-mail NewsBriefs
- Newsroom WebCam
- About NewsNet

Related Sites

- SportZone
- Ke Alaka'i
- The Scroll
- Communications

Dept.

- BYU Home Page
- Route Y

Sponsored By:

Film veteran advises students to use namesBy Angela Eckstein NewsNet Staff Writer - 4 Apr 2003E-mail or Print this stor

Sporting old leather boots given to him by John Wayne, faded blue jeans and a tan suede jacket over a teal western shirt, film producer Grenade Curran told students to use their names and pursue their goals with intent.

"You have a name and there is tremendous use in that alone," Curran said. "Your name can be of great use to your friends, family and career, if you want to make something out of it because your name leads to a title."

He described how his unique name gave him a foothold in the movie business when he met Walt Disney in the early 1950s.

When Disney asked where he got the name "Grenade," Curran gave him the same explanation his mother offered while he was growing up: "He was born with a blast."

And the inertia hasn't stopped.

In the 1950s, Curran worked for MGM Studios as an actor-dancer on "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers," "Singing in the Rain" and "Silk Stockings."

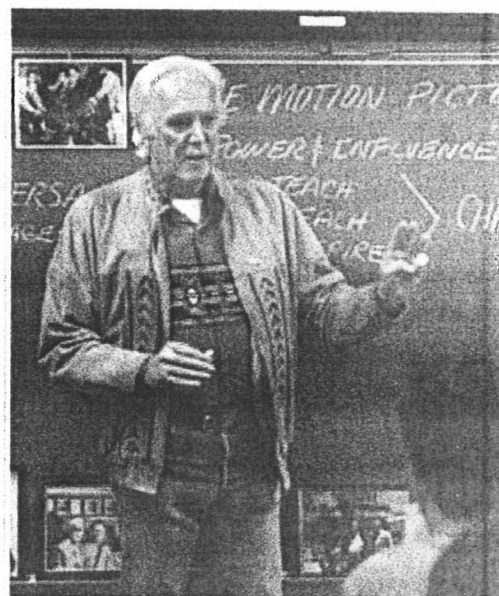

His career continued in 1955 at Walt Disney Studios when he worked as an actor-diver-production assistant on "Davy Crocket," "Mouseketeers" and "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

He worked behind the scenes for movies like "Camelot," "Hello Dolly" and "Planet of the Apes."

Curran attributed his success to being able to create his own opportunities.

Opportunities, he said, are like closed doors.

"It takes effort to turn the knob and step through," he said. "If you don't do it, somebody else will...If you don't make your own opportunities, you'll have a life of 'I

Amber Clawson

Film producer Grenade Curran encouraged students to create opportunities for themselves.

could've, should've and didn't."

Curran said students should create their own door and their own opportunities if neither exist.

"Make the goal and then make the motions to reach the goal with intent," Curran said.

Featured Services: E-mail NewsBriefs | Newsroom WebCam | WebCast Schedule

NewsNet | SportZone | BYU Religion

NewsNet Sponsorships | Contact Us | About NewsNet

Orem Man Shares Myriad 'Old Hollywood' Memories

By Jenica Stimpson - 28 Mar 2008

E-mail or Print this story

Grenade Curran is the hospitable type of guy who looks like he just stepped off a Western movie scene in his cowboy boots, hat and Levis. He is a vibrant LDS man who lives in Orem, and his stories of old Hollywood celebrities are practically innumerable.

Sitting on a couch with a large buffalo head mounted on the wall, Curran tells of his background. He was born to parents who worked in the movie business. His mother was a quarter Cherokee Indian who went to Hollywood with her brother. They went to Paramount Studios in Hollywood where she was assigned to their dance school, "Franchon and Marco." She did so well there that they sent her to MGM Studios in Culver City. Curran's dad worked at 20th Century Fox Studios in Beverly Hills, and was loaned to MGM on publicity. While there, he met Curran's mother.

Photo by Jenica Stimpson

Grenade Curran, a former Hollywood actor, holds one of his many photos in the basement of his Orem home.

"My mother didn't take any guff from nobody," Curran said. "She stood for something, which influenced me to stand for something. There is so much power, so much money and so much fame in the movie industry. It can influence you to become weak. You must stand for something or you will fall."

Curran is proud of his heritage, and described why buffalos are such an important symbol in his life. They brought the pioneers across the plains, and if not for this animal, he said, the church would not be where it is today.

Being a member of the LDS church in the movie industry wasn't always easy, but Curran managed to stand strong to his morals. A wall in his home is dedicated to Christ, the prophets and apostles of the church. While serving one of his two LDS missions, the apostle LeGrand Richards sent him a few dollars for ice cream, which he knew Curran loved. With so many church leaders on his side, it kept him on the right path.

Curran once turned down $500,000 to be the Marlboro man. He said he knows smoking is bad for health and he has never smoked, so why would he endorse something like that?

"If you change your diet, you change your life," Curran said. "You are the beneficiary of doing what the Lord wants you to do."

He attributes his good health and energy to keeping the Word of Wisdom.

Curran produced and acted in many movies while working for the various studios. He was able to work and associate himself with famous people like John Wayne and Walt Disney.

He was running errands for a producer at MGM one day when he stumbled upon John Wayne in his fitting room. He said he was sorry and was about to leave, but Wayne was friendly and they began talking.

There were boots lined up along his dressing room and Wayne was trying to decide which pair he should wear. Wayne was playing a role in which he was a father, and Curran said he should wear the rough boots because a patriarch would not be walking around in "slick" boots. As Curran left the room, Wayne told him to say "hi" to his parents.

While Curran was on the studio back lot of "Camelot," he got a phone call from Wayne asking how he was doing. He told Curran that he had something for him. Curran went to the front desk of men's wardrobe where there was an old brown paper sack wadded up on the top. It read, "Hold for Grenade, Don't Touch." Inside the bag were the boots that Wayne had worn in the Western movie. He wanted Curran to have the boots that he had suggested for the movie.

"The most powerful reaching, teaching, influencing medium on earth is the motion picture industry," Curran said. "A theater is a controlled setting. Whatever I produce for you to see reaches you, touches you. I can make you cry, annoy you, change your thoughts, moods and decisions. You don't disturb the setting, therefore what you see is what I, the producer, wants you to see."

Curran's house is more like a museum of old Hollywood than anything else. The walls in the hall going down the stairs are filled with pictures, original drawings and movie posters from his work with Walt Disney.

As he walks down each step, he points to every picture as his brown eyes take in the view. His memories flood to him as he speaks of each experience. The first time he was introduced to Disney, his name was a topic of discussion. Disney wanted to know how his parents had come up with the name "Grenade."

Later, when Disney was walking to the camera department and Curran was walking up Mickey Avenue to the animation building, Disney yelled out, "Hey, Shrapnell!" Shrapnell are the pieces of metal from an exploding grenade. Curran later switched the "W" and "D" to call Disney "Uncle Dalt Wisney" and continue the nickname game.

"No producer did more for the family than Walt Disney," Curran said. He has fond memories of working for Disney and his wholesome family entertainment. He worked with the production of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," "Davy Crockett" and "Mouseketeers." Curran was also assigned by Disney to work on the world invitational premier opening of Disneyland.

Curran's director's chair, which now sits in his "museum room" in the basement of his house in Orem, has been sat in by many famous people including Frank Sinatra, Dean Martin, Henry Fonda, Burt Lancaster and Kim Novak. He sits in it and reminisces as he holds the boots that John Wayne gave him.

"Old Hollywood is what I am," Curran said. "In movies today we lose goodness for the sake of money."

He worked with his cousin John Ahern while at Disney. Ahern worked for 50 years as a motion picture cartoonist. He has won five Emmys and one Golden Globe for his work.

"We were raised almost like brothers, really," Ahern said. "We used to get together at lunchtime and watch the train that goes around Disneyland as it was being built. These guys were in seventh heaven as they built it because they were model train builders building a life-size train."

Curran lives in Orem with his wife, Marta. They have raised five girls and three boys.

THE CHEROKEE BUFFALO

PRESS RELEASE

INDEPENDENT FILM PRODUCER.....

GRENAD CURRAN

801-607-1386

Title... PRODUCER & PACKAGER

Original Film True Story Titled..... "SHED NO BLOOD"

Screenplay ... An epic American-Western, based on the True Story known as, "The Utah War".

Locations... State of Utah & Historic color country.

Purpose... Produce & Direct the Pre-Production, Preparation, & Research, on an 1857 period-costume true story.

Brief Synopsis... The full length feature theatrical film covers a mistake made by President James Buchanan in 1857, that became known as "Buchanan's Blunder", when he dispatched General Albert Johnston with 4,900 Cavalry Troops, hauling Caisson Cannons with them, not to fight American Indians, but the innocent Mormon Pioneers.

The charges of Treason against the Mormons in Utah were found to be all false. So Brigham Young, the church prophet & president sent for to help again, the greatest Frontiersman-Gunman-Marshall ever in American-Western history, & he was... PORTER ROCKWELL. He out maneuvered the whole US 2nd Cavalry and stopped what is known in American History as "The Utah War", from becoming this country's worst frontier blood battle. The historic & key point of this whole story is... The Utah War literally delayed American history & the Civil War.

Background... GRENADE has an extensive background in the entertainment & film industry. His parents, Uncle & cousin were also in the movie business at M-G-M, RKO Radio Pictures Studios, 20th Century Fox & Paramount. In 1949, Grenade continued his western-movie career, when he did a small part in the classic film "Red Canyon" shot in southern Utah. Then continued working again in motion pictures & television as an Actor-Dancer. Plus some stage & sound recording as a comedian & sound effects performer at Walt Disney Studios.

GRENADE... transferred to film production behind the camera, on many Hollywood Studio Films, which then lead him into Producing, Directing, Packaging & Budgeting movies.

GRENADE... In the 1950's worked at M-G-M / United Artists Studios on:
"SEVEN BRIDES FOR SEVEN BROTHERS"  "SINGING IN THE RAIN"  "ROSE MARIE"
"SILK STOCKINGS"  "THE BAND WAGON"  "THE LEGEND OF Lyla CLAIRe"
"COLD TURKEY"

Samuel Goldwyn Studios, Hollywood... Grenade worked on: "GUYS AND DOLLS"

Walt Disney Studios... Grenade, in 1955 worked as an Actor-Diver-Production Assistant on:
"20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA"  "DAVY CROCKET"  "MOUSEKATEERS",
"DISNEYLAND", as a camera host at the World Invitational Premiere opening Telecast July 17, 1955.
"TOMORROWLAND", he worked with the Art Director and Architect as assistant.
"DISNEY STUDIOS / WED ENTERPRISES", recorded sound effects / voices on the cartoon "LADY AND THE TRAMP", a rooster; chickens and a howling dog & voice over-actor 20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA.

20th Century Fox... Grenade worked on, "HELLO DOLLY"  "PLANET of THE APES"

Columbia Pictures, Hollywood... Grenade worked on "THE PROFESSIONALS"  "MAJOR DUNDEE"

Paramount Pictures, Hollywood... Grenade worked on "SARGENTS 3" & as an Indian Actor Warrior was almost killed in a Cavalry charge when 250 horses ran over & around him while shooting with Frank Sinatra & the Rat Pack.

Warner Bros. Studios... Grenade continued working in film behind the camera on productions, when Directors cast him in small parts in: "CAMELOT"  "THE GREAT BANK ROBBERy"  "THERE WAS A CROOKED MAN"  "THE GOOD GUYS & THE BAD GUYS"  "THE SCALPHUNTERS"

Network Television... Grenade worked on: "THE HIGH CHAPPARELL"  "CHEYENNE"  "WYATT EARP"  "STAR TREK"  "QUEEN & KING FOR A DAY"  "COMBAT"  "THE BEVERLY HILLBILLIES"  "THE PHYLLIS DILLER SHOW"  "GARRISON'S GORILLAS"  "PLAYHOUSE 90" and others.